Dear Hiring Team,

I'm writing about the VP of International Product role. I've spent the last decade building product organisations that operate across multiple countries and markets, and this role sits squarely in that experience.

I was part of the founding team and Chief Product Officer at Hive, scaling the UK's leading smart home platform from zero to over five million customers. I then became Chief Product Officer at Vodafone Smart Tech, where I built a global product studio and launched ten new hardware and digital products across thirteen countries, including European and South African markets. Running product across that many regions meant constantly balancing local relevance against a coherent global strategy, and building localisation into the product process itself rather than treating it as a late-stage translation exercise.

Most recently I was Managing Director and Founder of Etc., BT Group's innovation and incubation arm. I built and led a team of over 250 across product, technology, commercial and strategy, and sat on BT's Digital & Technology Board. We scaled two ventures into divisions valued at over £500M and built AI into products from first principles rather than retrofitting it. I currently advise Boxxed.ai, a GenAI platform helping SMEs adopt AI in their workflows.

Across Hive, Vodafone and BT the pattern has been consistent: take a product organisation into new markets, build the team and operating model needed to get there, and stay close enough to the detail to make it work at scale. That's the experience I'd bring to McGraw Hill.

My CV is attached.

Best regards

Tom
